The New Tie (No Tie Required)

• Face it: We're living in a post-tie world. We're leaving our dress shirts open. We're wearing more tees and Henleys—sometimes under suits. So what do you do with all that newfound real estate south of your collar? Wear a necklace. With everything. Our favorites have slim chains and a little wear and tear—like Cartography's one-of-a-kind Sisters of Mercy necklaces, decked out with vintage spiritual pendants. A slightly cooler story than the "Made in China" tag on your old ties, right?—JIM MOORE

Print Is Personality

Designers are pushing patterns hard this spring, so expect to see loud, playful shirts in stores. But don't be intimidated; this is a look you can easily master. Start by coordinating the size of the shirt's print with the size of your body, says executive style consultant Andrew Weitz. A man with a slight build looks most natural in a shirt with a smaller pattern (see the guy wearing pink, far right), while a man with a more muscular or stocky frame will benefit from a larger design. Follow this rule when you want to fit in, and break it with abandon when you're ready to be noticed (like the middle guy).

Curate Your Color

Build a wardrobe from colors that flatter your skin tone and you'll always look like a youthful paragon of health and vigor—even if you happen to be nursing a ferocious, head-crushing hangover (hypothetically speaking, of course). Here's how to look your best: If your skin is pale, stay away from bright colors. They'll wash you out, says Leatrice Eiseman of the Pantone Color Institute. Softer hues, especially blues, rose tones, and greens, will look better on you. You dark-skin dudes have it a bit easier. You can pull off pale and bright shades—any color that contrasts with your skin tone will attract the right kind of attention. Finally, if you're olive-toned, go through your closet and trash your yellowish-green shirts. They make you look like Shrek. Our tip: Pick deep colors, like turquoise or teal.
